COMPLETE EXAMPLE REPORT

What your personal assessment could look like

Daniyar — fictional learner Example · not your result

Participate more comfortably in classes and everyday conversations, while reading about personal interests.

Fictional example. Daniyar, his answers, and the observations were created to demonstrate the report. Levels are assigned within the scenario, not established by assessment. This is not a real learner's result or a claim that a teacher has completed a review.

01 / PERSONAL ASSESSMENT

Profile

Reading is a strength. The next priority is following changes within a conversation.

In this scenario, Daniyar understands a writer's position and conditions in written messages. In listening, he retains simple details but selects an original meeting time instead of the final arrangement. His written requests are clear, although verb forms do not always match the time of the event.

SKILL	EXAMPLE	WHAT IT MEANS
Reading	B2	Distinguishes an overall recommendation from a reservation and follows a condition that changes a practical decision. Level in the fictional scenario EX-R1 · EX-R2
Listening	A2	In the scenario, identifies time and place in a simple message but loses an updated arrangement in a conversation. Level in the fictional scenario EX-L1 · EX-L2
Speaking	B1	Builds a connected short account and asks for clarification when needed; past-time forms are inconsistent. Illustration; no actual teacher assessment has taken place EX-S1 · EX-S2
Writing	B1	Explains a problem and requested action clearly; the account has a sequence and a conclusion. Verb forms and some sentence connections need attention. Illustration; no actual teacher assessment has taken place EX-W1 · EX-W2
Language use	B1	Recognises time relationships and an appropriate request; using forms consistently in original writing is less secure. Supporting evidence, not a separate overall proficiency level EX-U1 · EX-U2 · EX-W1

There is no "A2–B2 overall score." Separate skills describe different capabilities, and the course recommendation has its own rationale.

▼ Basis and limits of this example

Reading. The two displayed responses illustrate the interpretation; they do not establish B2 by themselves.

Listening. These are written scenarios, not recordings. Reading a transcript is not a listening assessment.

Speaking. A written excerpt cannot establish pronunciation, speaking rate, pause duration, or the quality of live interaction.

Writing. The level is illustrative. A real result requires rubric-based marking, known task conditions, and additional review for borderline cases.

Language use. Selecting an answer does not demonstrate spontaneous control of the construction in speaking or writing.

02 / PERSONAL ASSESSMENT

Strengths and priorities

What to build on

You read beyond isolated facts

In EX-R1, the chosen answer preserves both praise for the route and the reservation about its difficulty. In EX-R2, the response accounts for the backup room's limited capacity.

EX-R1 · EX-R2

Keep reading interesting, suitably challenging material while working separately on listening.

Your messages give the reader something clear to act on

EX-W1 clearly states the reason for writing, the requested change, and two questions for the organiser. Errors do not hide the message's purpose.

EX-W1

Keep the clear "problem → request → needed details" structure, then check the language forms.

You have a way to keep a conversation going when something is unclear

In EX-S2, Daniyar identifies the unclear expression and, after rephrasing, gives an answer with a reason. This is more useful than guessing the question.

EX-S2

Continue using brief clarification requests such as "Do you mean…?" and "Could you say that another way?"

The most useful next priorities

Keep track of the final decision when speakers change a plan

In EX-L2, 10:00 belongs to the rejected option. The final arrangement is 10:30 at the south gate.

EX-L2

What to do

For a new short conversation, write two lines: “first proposed” and “finally agreed.” Compare with the transcript only after a second listen.

How to check transfer

On new material, identify the final time, place, or action and explain which earlier option was dropped. A single success does not indicate a level change.

Match verb forms to the time relationship you mean

In EX-W1, “change … yesterday” needs “changed,” and “have already pay” needs “have already paid.” EX-S1’s “Last month I start” shows a related inconsistency.

EX-W1 · EX-S1 · EX-U1

What to do

Write short messages about real situations: one completed event with a time reference and one action relevant now. Mark the time cue and check the complete verb phrase.

How to check transfer

A few days later, write new messages without a model. Check transfer to a new situation, not just the corrected text.

Response evidence

Reading

EX-R1

Reading: a recommendation with a reservation

> The river walk is described online as an easy afternoon out. That is fair if you stop at the old bridge. Beyond it, the path becomes narrow and uneven, and the final climb is quite steep. I enjoyed the quieter section most, but I would not send a family there expecting a gentle stroll. The route deserves its popularity; the description needs to be clearer about whom the whole walk will suit.

What is the writer's overall view?

A. The route is worthwhile, but its full length is more demanding than the description suggests.
B. The route's popularity is undeserved because the final section is unsafe for every visitor.
C. The easy first section is the only part the writer enjoyed.

Response in the example: The route is worthwhile, but its full length is more demanding than the description suggests.

Key: The route is worthwhile, but its full length is more demanding than the description suggests.

The response preserves the positive evaluation and the qualification for particular visitors. The writer does not reject the route for everyone.

EX-R2

Reading: a condition that changes a decision

> We have sixty bookings for the outdoor film night. If it rains, the upstairs room is available, but it holds only forty people. Please do not promise everyone an indoor place yet. We can offer the first forty customers a choice of moving indoors or receiving a refund; the remaining customers will need a refund or a place at the next screening. The weather decision will be made on Friday morning.

What should the organiser avoid saying before Friday's decision?

A. The event might have to move indoors.
B. Every ticket holder is guaranteed a place if the event moves indoors.
C. Some customers may be offered a later screening.

Response in the example: Every ticket holder is guaranteed a place if the event moves indoors.

Key: Every ticket holder is guaranteed a place if the event moves indoors.

The response brings together sixty bookings and forty seats: having a room does not mean having space for everyone.

Listening

EX-L1

Listening: a straightforward message

Fictional report scenario. There is no recording; the intended transcript and an invented response appear below.

> Hello, this is a reminder about your cooking lesson on Thursday. It starts at six in Room Three. Please bring a container so you can take your food home.

When does the lesson start?

A. Thursday at six.
B. Tuesday at six.
C. Thursday at three.

Response in the example: Thursday at six.

Key: Thursday at six.

In the scenario, the explicitly stated day and time are retained. This response does not show how someone would handle an extended conversation.

EX-L2

Listening: a revised arrangement

Fictional dialogue and response. No real listening session or recording exists for this example.

> Maya: Shall we meet by the north gate at ten?
>
> Ali: I can't get there that early. Would half past ten work?
>
> Maya: That's fine. Oh, but the north gate is closed this weekend.
>
> Ali: Then let's use the south gate. Same time—half past ten?
>
> Maya: Yes. I'll see you there.

What is the final arrangement?

A. The north gate at ten.
B. The south gate at ten.
C. The south gate at half past ten.

Response in the example: The south gate at ten.

Key: The south gate at half past ten.

The selected answer retains the new place but keeps the earlier time. This is a specific target for practising changes in an exchange, not evidence that every skill is weak.

Language use

EX-U1

Language use: sequence of events

> The bus left at 8:05. I reached the stop at 8:10.

Which sentence matches the situation?

A. The bus was about to leave when I reached the stop.
B. The bus had already left when I reached the stop.
C. The bus was still waiting when I reached the stop.

Response in the example: The bus had already left when I reached the stop.

Key: The bus had already left when I reached the stop.

The sequence is recognised correctly. “Already” also provides a cue; this is not independent evidence of productive command of the past perfect.

EX-U2

Language use: an appropriate request

> You need an organiser to move your booking, but you do not know whether another place is available.

Which request leaves the availability open?

A. I confirm that you have moved my booking.
B. You moved my booking yesterday.
C. Would it be possible to move my booking to Sunday?

Response in the example: Would it be possible to move my booking to Sunday?

Key: Would it be possible to move my booking to Sunday?

The answer asks about a possibility instead of asserting that the change has already happened. EX-W1 also communicates a clear request.

04 / PERSONAL ASSESSMENT

Writing and speaking

EX-W1

Writing 1: changing a booking

Original fictional learner text containing intentional errors.

Task: Write to the organiser: explain why you cannot attend on Saturday, request a change, and ask about payment and timing.

> Hello Marina,
> I booked a place on Saturday's photography workshop, but my manager change my shift yesterday and now I work until two. I would like to move my booking to Sunday if a place is available. I have already pay for Saturday, so could you tell me if I need to pay anything more?
> I don't have a camera, but I can bring my phone. On the website it says that phones are fine. Please let me know what time Sunday's workshop starts and whether you can move my booking.
> Thank you,
> Daniyar

PAST-TIME VERB FORM

~~my manager change my shift yesterday~~
→ my manager changed my shift yesterday

Yesterday locates the change in a completed past time, so changed is needed.

FORM AFTER HAVE

~~I have already pay for Saturday~~
→ I have already paid for Saturday

The phrase have already … needs paid. This is not a rule to always use the present perfect with already; the correction concerns the construction already chosen in the text.

What works already

The reason and request appear immediately. "If a place is available" acknowledges that the change may not be possible. Questions about payment and the start time give the organiser clear points to answer.

Next revision

Correct the two forms, then write a new message about a different completed situation. Do not replace the whole message with elaborate language merely to sound impressive.

EX-W2

Writing 2: an experience and its lesson

Original fictional text; this is not a real student's submission.

Task: Describe a plan that changed and explain what you would do differently next time.

> Last summer my brother and I decided to cycle to a lake near our town. We had never done a long ride before, so we prepared some food and checked the map.
> Before we left, my brother and our neighbour checked my bike. He said it was ready. After an hour, one wheel became loose, and we decided to walk back rather than risk a longer ride.
> I was disappointed, however I learned something useful. Next time I will check the bikes more carefully and take a small repair kit. A good plan is not only about where you want to arrive.

REFERENCE CLARITY

~~my brother and our neighbour checked my bike. He said it was ready.~~
→ If the neighbour said it: "Our neighbour said it was ready." If the brother did: "My brother said it was ready."

He has two possible antecedents. The reviewer cannot choose the intended person for the writer; the reference needs clarification.

SENTENCE BOUNDARY

~~I was disappointed, however I learned something useful.~~
→ I was disappointed. However, I learned something useful.

These are two independent clauses. A full stop and a comma after However make the boundary clear; other correct ways to join the clauses are also possible.

What works already

Preparation, problem, decision, and lesson appear in a clear sequence. The final paragraph connects to the experience rather than adding an unrelated slogan.

Next revision

Clarify who spoke and repair the sentence with however. Keep the writer's own sequence and voice.

EX-S1

Speaking: a short account

Fictional text example; no recording. This is not a transcript of an actual interview, and timing and pronunciation were not measured.

> Interviewer: Tell me about something new you tried recently.
> Daniyar: Last month I start a cooking class. At first I was worried because I usually cook only simple food. In the first lesson we made soup, and mine was too salty. The teacher showed me how to fix it. I liked that we could try again, not only listen. Now I cook for my family sometimes.

- There is an event, an initial feeling, a problem, help, and an outcome; the account is connected and understandable.
- "Last month I start" → "Last month I started." The forms "was," "made," and "showed" show that the same error does not occur in every sentence.

This text cannot be credited with fluency, a particular accent, or confident pronunciation.

EX-S2

Speaking: clarifying a question

Fictional example; there is no audio recording or timing data.

> Interviewer: What would make your daily journey less stressful?
> Daniyar: Could you explain “less stressful”? Do you mean easier?
>
> Interviewer: Yes. What would make the trip easier for you?
> Daniyar: More buses in the morning. Sometimes I wait twenty minutes and then the bus is crowded. If there were more buses, I could leave home later and still arrive on time.

- The clarification request is specific: it identifies the unclear expression and proposes a meaning.
- After rephrasing, the learner gives a proposal, reason, and possible result. In a real conversation, the assessor should check how often this help is needed.

One invented exchange cannot confirm consistently independent interaction.

How the interpretation is supported

Reading · Position and conditions

EX-R1 and EX-R2 illustrate two different operations: preserving a writer’s qualification and applying a capacity constraint.

EX-R1 · EX-R2

Further evidence needed: Other texts and task types, plus consistent performance on a new form.

Listening · Explicit details and revised arrangements

In the fictional responses, EX-L1 is successful while EX-L2 retains an outdated time. That distinction is more useful than one undifferentiated percentage.

EX-L1 · EX-L2

Further evidence needed: Actual human recordings, known listening conditions, and several independent situations.

Speaking · Coherence, interaction, and language control

EX-S1 contains a connected account and a past-form error; EX-S2 illustrates useful clarification. Pronunciation and fluency are not assessed from this material.

EX-S1 · EX-S2

Further evidence needed: A live interview with several tasks, observation of response independence, and a trained teacher’s assessment.

Writing · Task achievement, organisation, and accuracy

Both texts fulfil their communicative purpose and have a clear structure. Comments identify specific forms and a reference issue rather than labelling the grammar generally weak.

EX-W1 · EX-W2

Further evidence needed: Actual independent submissions, known task conditions, and an agreed rubric; a second review for a borderline decision.

05 / PERSONAL ASSESSMENT

Four-week plan

An example route for this profile: four 15-minute sessions each week. It does not promise a level increase in a month. Use new practice materials, not active diagnostic-bank items.

Approximately 15 minutes, four times a week.

WEEK 1

Separate the first proposal from the final arrangement

- Two sessions: listen to a new short conversation about a changed plan. After the first listen, note the situation; after the second, note the first proposal and final agreement.
- Two sessions: compare your notes with the transcript and retell the final decision in three sentences.

Check

At the end of the week, try the same task with an unfamiliar conversation and record what information was lost.

If the overall meaning is lost, choose shorter, clearer material. Do not begin by speeding up the audio.

WEEK 2

Check time and form in your own messages

- Two sessions: write 60–90 words about a completed event. Underline yesterday, last week, and other time references; check the related verb forms.
- Two sessions: write short requests with a current consequence—you have already paid or have not received a reply yet. Check the complete construction you chose.

Check

Two days later, write a new message without looking at the previous one.

If errors persist, practise one situation type over several attempts and request a brief review.

WEEK 3

Connect listening with a clear retelling

- Two sessions: after a new conversation, note four keywords and retell the problem, options, and decision aloud.
- Two sessions: discuss a small real choice with a partner. Ask for clarification when needed, then confirm the agreement.

Check

Your partner should be able to repeat the same final decision. Compare meaning, not identical wording.

If no partner is available, record a retelling for yourself, but do not treat that as an interaction assessment.

WEEK 4

Check transfer to new material

- One session: a new conversation with a revised plan; another: a new request message with a reason.
- One session: a short conversation with follow-up questions; another: compare the new work with week one and choose the next priority.

Check

Check whether the final decision was retained, the request was clear, and forms improved without prompting. Discuss concrete examples with a teacher when available.

If only the familiar text improved, continue practising transfer. Repeating the same test does not confirm a proficiency increase.

06 / PERSONAL ASSESSMENT

Placement and clarification

A course matched to the profile, not an arithmetic average

In this scenario: B1 with focused listening support, provided the conditions below are met.

The scenario's connected B1 speaking and writing give a reason to consider this group. B2 reading should remain a strength. A2 listening calls for support and a check that the actual class is accessible.

Before confirming placement

- A teacher conducts an actual interview and reviews actual writing. That review has not occurred in this demonstration.
- The learner can follow ordinary class explanations and tasks with occasional clarification, rather than continual translation or simplification.
- Focused listening support is available and the workload fits the learner's schedule.

If those conditions are unmet, use a bridge module or a different group, then reconsider placement. Strength in one skill does not remove difficulty in another.

A B2 group requires additional evidence: following its spoken tasks and discussions, developing responses, and completing its writing demands. B2 reading alone does not establish that readiness.

How to clarify an unexpected result

- Identify the skill and an example that seems inconsistent with your experience. Mention audio problems, fatigue, unclear instructions, or outside assistance where relevant.

- Ask how the task, your response, and the interpretation connect. A percentage alone does not explain a level.
- Where evidence is insufficient, use additional new tasks and a live check. Repeating familiar questions is not independent confirmation.

Clarifying a result and buying a course are separate decisions. The report should remain useful even if you do not enrol.

Choose a pace after confirming placement

Standard course

Indicative duration: approximately 6 months for a level programme
May suit a steady schedule with time to practise between lessons. For this profile, listening support should be planned in advance.

Intensive course

Indicative duration: approximately 3 months for a level programme
Consider when more frequent regular study is feasible. Discuss the actual weekly workload and access to the course's spoken demands first.

Programme duration does not guarantee progression to the next CEFR level. Schedule, fees, group availability, and included support need confirmation.
